In the book, "The Cat That Went to Heaven", a poor painter and a stray cat became more friendly to each other. When his wife brought a cat home, he was unhappy that they had to spend more money on the cat, but the painter got happier about it more into the book once he noticed how mature the cat was.

The first time he met the cat he was not happy about it. He didn't want any more money to be spent on an unknown cat. The cat behaved differently than what the painter expected, he followed every command and kept from eating food without permission. The surprised painter did start to get an idea of what the cat is.

Next, when the painter was painting, he noticed that the cat was looking in his drawing. He started to get more open about the cat and began thinking that his cat was a lucky cat. Also, he always noticed the cat always wanting to be in his drawing.

Lastly, the painter saw that the cat was more and more sad about the fact that he is not in the drawing even though he is not supposed to paint in a cat because they didn't sacrifice them. Although he knew this, he could not stop him from adding his favorite cat. The people didn't like it, the painter did and that was all he cared.

In conclusion, the painter was happy at the end, but at the start he didn't like the cat, he thought it was too much money to spend, but he ended up liking the cat and even breaking a rule to put his adoring cat in his drawing. He changed a lot from the beginning, and he learned a lot.
